Medical Instructions

Everyone included in your application, whether accompanying you to Canada or not, must undergo a medical examination with a physician on the list of designated doctors. If you are a divorced or separated parent, a child of whom you have sole or joint custody is considered your dependent child, even if he or she normally lives with the other parent.

You will receive a medical exam kit from us after you submit your completed application. In certain cases we will not send you a medical exam kit until after we have determined that you are eligible to come to Canada as a permanent resident.

The medical exam kit includes a list of doctors to whom you can go for your examination. We will only recognize exams performed by one of these doctors. The doctor will send the exam results to us, and we will review them in order to determine whether there are any medical reasons which would prevent you or your accompanying family from coming to Canada.

It is your responsibility to ensure that you contact the doctor promptly as well as pay for the examination and take any additional exams and tests which may be required by us.

When you go for your medical exam, you will be required to take with you the forms which we send you and show passports for everybody being examined. You must also tell the examining doctor about all past and present medical problems and conditions, and provide the doctor with any available documentation such as physician's reports, treatment or prescriptions.

If your medical results prove satisfactory, they have a validity of one year from the date of exam. If the processing of your application is delayed longer than this, then you will be required to do the medical exams again.
